"Many new-generation managers tend to be doubtful of corporate values and are questioning the intrinsic worth of corporate success," said John Wareham, presi dent of the firm.

DEAD DOLPHINS A PROBLEM

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese fishermen who slaughtered a school of 1,000 dolphins last week are having problems disposing of the carcasses.

A spokesman for the Maritime Safety Agency said Sunday that the fishermen of Iki Island, who clubbed the dolphins to death on a beach Thursday, first intended to dump them back into the sea but were warned by officials they would be violating anti-pollution laws.

The spokesman said the local fishermen's co-operative has agreed instead to bury the carcasses on an uninhabited island near Iki, which is off the coast of Japan's southernmost main island of Kyushu.

Japanese fishermen frequently kill dolphins to prevent the sea mammals from eating their catch, but last week's kill is is believed to have been the biggest slaughter in recent years. Fishermen in 300 boats rounded up the dolphin school and drove it onto an inlet beach for the kill.

WASHINGTON (ÅP) — Even before the two train derailments that caused 20 deaths in Florida and Tennessee, the United States government planned thorough hearings into the transportation of hazardous materials on the railways and highways.

The National Transportation and Safety Board (NTSB) figures there are 6,000 to 7,000 derailments a year. Kay Bailey, acting board chairman, was so concerned by the continuing spate of derailments involving dangerous substances that on Thursday she called for rare full-board hearings on the matter.

Slattery said in an interview Sunday that among the causes of derailments are poor road beds ("the worms get in the ties and the tracks spread"); heavier and longer rail cars ("the rails aren't any stronger"); and railway response to pressure for greater safety ("they always tell you they're broke").

Kitimat Killed

British Columbia is just lucky this is a federal election year. Ottawa's sudden decision to kill the Kitimat oil port and pipeline project has as much to do with politics and the fact that Liberals in B.C. have rarely been less popular as it does with environmental factors.

The Berger commission which investigated the social and environmental impact of a prospective Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline was a similar move.

Regardless of ulterior motives, though, Ottawa did the right thing in rejecting the Kitimat pipeline Special inquiry commissioner Andrew Thompson manoeuvred so that the government was left with a couple of distasteful decisions either close down Thompson's probe, which he was going to start up again in March just before its official term expired, or proceed with National Energy Board hearings on the project.

The Kitimat Pipe Line Co. proposal was on dubious environmental grounds from the beginning. Steering tankers of a couple of hundred thousand tons deadweight down a narrow inlet that is often shrouded in fog, after navigating the tricky Inside Passage down from Alaska, is not a sensible proposition from our point of view, especially as B.C. would receive only transitory benefits from the line's construction, and none of the oil it would have carried.

It is difficult to sympathize much with KPL president Jack Cressey, who objected to the way the government dispatched his proiect, without hearing technical information from the company itself. The company has only itself to blame. It played coy while Thompson's inquiry proceeded last year. KPL suspended its plans, so the inquiry was left without a formal proposal to study. Then after Thompson shut down last fall, the company's application to the NEB was revived. The company may have thought the tactics were smart; in the end they backfired

The end of the KPL proposal, however, again renews pressure to select a spot close to us - Port Angeles or in Puget Sound — as the site for an oil port to transfer Alaskan crude to the U.S. midwest.

Ottawa's announcement on Thursday was welcome news in one respect for B.C. but it means the possibility of massive oil spills in and around Victoria is much greater today than it was a

It's Not So Far

Those who worry about acute care being phased out of the Victoria General Hospital should study a city map, which shows that most residents of Victoria, Victoria West, Oak Bay and Saanich live within three miles of the Royal Jubilee hospital. Most other residents will be within three or four miles of the Helmcken hospital, if it ever gets built.

Greater Victoria is now a sprawling city with 218,250 residents, with 27 per cent, or nearly 60,000, over retirement age. Have we all gone rather senile and doddering that the thought of travelling a few extra miles throws us for a loop?

Most of the elderly live within a three-mile radius of the Victoria General so geriatric care seems logical for that hospital, certainly not obstetrics and pediatrics, when the closing of schools indicates that in the city core

Nickel Pincher

Yesterday I observed a woman urchase an article in a downtown drug store with an American $5 bill. The clerk gave the woman 25 cents in exchange or five cents on the dollar. The woman asked the clerk what the present exchange rate was to which the clerk replied, "Oh, it varies, it's up, it's down." The woman naturally refunded her purchase and I couldn't blame her.

I think there are few people in Victoria, thanks to Grace McCarthy's friendship exchange advertisements, who don't know the current exchange rate of Canadian to American dollars. It annoys and embarrasses me to see Canadian merchants, such as the manager of this particular store, take every opportunity to turn a nickel, especially from American visitors whose business is of such benefit to Victoria. — Brian Wood, 201-885 Old Esqui-mait Road.

Team Policing

It is practically impossible not to become intrigued by the concept of team policing after reading the report on the subject prepared last week by Ald. Robin Blencoe. His own infectious enthusiasm, acquired in a three-day trip to Van-

For instance: "I have no hesitation in saying that team policemen look on themselves as being rather 'different' - not just enforcers of the law, but friends of the community they serve. Team policemen have a high degree of sensitivity to the community and the people they serve. They feel they have a responsibility to work with all the various agencies and community groups to find new and more effective ways of alleviating, and if possible, pre venting the causes of crime.'

And: "My own conviction is that the Vancouver community is better off than we are at the present. It appears that a successful key to police work has been found. The couver to study that city's policing team policemen, therefore, and couver to study that city's policing team policemen, therefore, and couver to study that city's policing team policemen, therefore, and growing atmosphere of trust and confidence that exists between them and the ordinary citizens augurs well for the future.'

Blencoe does not go into detail about the changes that would have to be made in the Victoria city police to allow them to adopt team policing. Neither does he discuss the costs that would be incurred, except to say that research has shown that over-all, team policing can reduce costs through increasing productivity and effectiveness.

That is probably just as well. His report was prepared only for discussion purposes and it is probably more useful that Victoria look at the broad concept of team policing and crime prevention before becoming bogged down in details of implementation.

Blencoe hopes that his report and the general concept — will be widely debated before specific recommendations go to city council or the city police board. We can only encourage every interested Victoria group to try to become involved in this discussion.

There's no guarantee team policing could or would work in Victoria, but it sounds like a much more reasonable proposition than some of the other simplistic solutions to crime that are so often

Books, Movies on Vietnam Pour Out

WASHINGTON - Vietnam, it is said, was the only war in which Americans celebrated their own defeat. Judging by the swarm of films, novels, booklength journalism and commentaries just now hitting the American con-sciousness, the celebration has become

Six years after U.S. ground forces pulled out and three years after South Vietnam collapsed, the full force of vement is being reflected in the mass ication marketplace.

There is nothing even remotely up-beat about the delayed American reaction. "Vietnam: It was U.S. versus us," is how Esquire magazine headlined a recent review of Michael Herr's bestselling book Dispatches.

Fuelling the national sense of dismay are other factors: more than half a ion Vietnam veterans out of work, a U.S. congress that seems bound to turn its back on them, and fears by conservatives that the war created a "culture

Shortly after the last shot was fired in the war in 1975, an antiwar activist wrote to journalist Gloria Emerson who had produced some of the most ensitive writing on the 12-year conflict.

Heavy on Corruption

"Nobody wants to listen," the activist mourned. "We are like voices from the tomb.'

Within two years, however, the postwar lull ended. The library of congress in Washington reports that at least 135 books about Vietnam have been published since war's end, ranging from titles like Petticoat Medic in Vietmam to A Rumor of War, a gritty docu-ment of jungle combat by former marine Philip Caputo.

A senior editor of the Knopf publishing house in New York says dozens of Vietnam books cross his desk every year, all of them "very much down on the American role, and heavy on the

The underlying literary mood of the Vietnam books is gloom, the kind typified by paraplegic Ron Kovic's Born on

"You have finally realized what we almost all come to realize," the soldier tells her. "You can chase people through all the words of all the languages, as Yossarian (of Catch-22) attempted, but you can never make them understand."

But nothing quite captures the grimness of Vietnam combat like Michael Herr's Dispatches, which has sold 50. 000 copies in hardback after three ths on the bestseller lists. Through the eyes of the "grunt" (enlisted man), Herr describes the fighting as a lavish technicolor hallucination.

'Boo-sheeit!" he quotes one enlisted man. "I ain't never getting hit in Viet-nam . . . because it don't exist." Herr's ear for the language of "Four months?" interrupts another soldier. "Baby, four seconds in this whorehouse'll get you greased."

Less personal, but no less devastating on the American psyche, is the controversial book Decent Interval, the insider's story of the American evacuation of Saigon by former CIA analyst Frank Snepp.

Snepp, now facing legal action for breaking his oath of secrecy, closes the circle in the barrage of criticism directed at the U.S. involvement. Even in defeat, he says, the government botched up, on a scale of stupidity and mismanment matching that of the 1961 Bay of Pigs invasion.

In the careful, step-by-step scrutiny of the war years 1964 to 1973, it is not only the U.S. government that takes the knocks, however. Coppola is taking a number of calculated gambles with his film, notably, that the American public will be receptive to this kind of brutal analysis.

Hard Truth

To hedge his bet, Coppola had presidential pollster Pat Caddell do a preliminary opinion sampling of the public. Caddell reported back that a major film on Vietnam could work commercially, as long as it was "nondidactic." In other words, the public would shell out $4 for the movie as long as it allowed them a little detachment.

The marketing strategy for Apoca lypse Now has not yet been fully decided, but it is expected to downplay the Vietnam association to some degree. Coppola shouldn't be overly worried:

the American people are being softened up. Vietnam-related movies now playing in North American theatres aren't pulling too many punches. Heroes, Rolling Thunder, Coming Home, and The Boys in Company C have already gone a long way in etching the effect of the war on American soldiers.

Surely by now the people of Victoria must be sick and tired of the hassle over building a new hospital.

Does the minister of health not real-favor of this hospital being built on the site of the St. Ann's Academy, adjoining the present Victoria General. Here we have an old building with spacious grounds sold to the government on the upderstanding that it would ultimately be used to extend the old VGH which has so well served the people of Victoria for so many years. Here we have the ground with all the necessary services, to build a good modern four-storey pital, centrally located to tie in with the existing VGH. This could be connected by an underground passage, and the old hospital used as an after care, and recu-

Bad Boycott

In my opinion it has been evident for some time that many of the union lead-ers and their officials have a low mentality level. A prime example is the recent boycott of a cafe operated by the CNIB. To find that people suffering from the terrible affliction of blindness

Surely there must be some legal action that can be taken against this

I have little doubt that many of the members of this union would be against this boycott if they were allowed to voice an opinion. Unfortunately when joining a union it is no longer necessary to think as an individual, you are told what to do. — G. W. Frost, Sooke.

Let Children Choose Best of Both Worlds

In 1958, a young Air Force physician from New England began to probe the lives of children growing up in Mississippi during the last years of segregation. Using a method of "direct observation" learned from Anna Freud and Erik H. Erikson, and a style of reporting comindful of Jerose Area Dr. Robert remindful of James Agee, Dr. Robert Coles produced in 1961 Children of Crisis

I: A Study of Courage and Fear.
That work blossomed into five vol-That work blossomed into five vol-umes over 17 years. Migrants, Share-croppers, Mountaineers and The South Goes North (volumes 2 and 3 of Children of Crisis) took Coles to Appalachia and to the new northern homes of southern children. Now, the series concludes with its masterpiece, Eskimos, Chicanos, In-dians, and a ironical denouement, Privi-leged Ones: The Well-Off and the Rich in America.

n America. Coles hasn't tried to construct a uniform model of childrearing. Instead, he offers us "a child psychiatrist's and a pediatrician's naturalistic observa-tions" of particular boys and girls. Coles talks, plays, draws, and sits in silence with them in their natural or from the children's narrative — a perfection of his earlier style and, he says, a personal "relief" — and gives wider discretion to his seeing eye. The product is this sensual portrait of growing up in America.

Childhood for the poor can be brief, and an adolescence of schooling and play may yield to the necessity of earning one's own keep and to the responsi-bilities, the birthright, handed down by the tribe or community. While rich children show a loyalty to the money, if not always to the social views of their parents, poor children are often loyal to their poverty, which is the fate of their

No one can deny the need for money but some of the people Coles encoun-tered do have other priorities. Some want to be left alone to cultivate their own language, old ways of hunting and eating, and traditional identities. Nor is this sentiment found only among old or defeated people on reservations. Joe, a 13-year-old Eskimo boy, walks miles with his father to shed the noise of orcycles and snowmobiles and to listen to the ducks. "That's the kind of noise my father and I like to hear!

Hopi and Pueblo children regard the white man as a plunderer, who, in the pursuit of wealth, turns the land into a junk pile. "He spoils everything he ouches, our father says — including us, the Indians!" Rose, a nine-year-old Pueblo girl from New Mexico, is full of fight. "That's what my father wants all of us to remember — that we should fight the white man right here, in our house and outside on our land, by being different from him." Pueblo and Hopi hildren are taught, in Cole's words, "to care passionately for the land . . . in the hope that others will do likewise."

Is this hope farfetched? Is the Indian point of view hopelessly obsolete? Or is it on the horizon? Whatever its outcome, this attitude for the present stands between the ledies and varying hope. tween the Indian and vanquishment. It is an "entirely assertive resignation and the people who practise it have something in common, Coles suggests;

with "Kierkegaard's Christ, the Man who confused just about everyone by His willingness to be defeated so long as he made clear His beliefs — in the hope that, ultimately, others would come to see their value."

This kind of fight must have troubled Coles. He was trained in the South and in Appalachia to observe children in the context of a protest movement, knowing that he "might be of some practical help to the harrassed participants". But among the poor peoples of the American West, he found no one overriding issue, no representative movement to voice the people's outrage. Among Indians especially, he observed "a distinct unwillingness to shake one's fist at the world, rise up, and change the social order". The fight was deep in the home territory, in the consciences of individuals — not a fight that invites outsiders to a doctor and stayed on to learn from the children. Their "crisis" was not a response to specific historical events, such as the desegregation of a school system, but rather a continuing emergency. How do young Eskimos, Chicanos, and Indians come to know themselves in the midst of the conquerer's world? What should they do with their lives? Should one follow the ways of ancestors and parents, or strive instead' to be modern and to express oneself as a consumer, property owner, profit maker? On this road the chances for success are slim.

Many well-meaning white teachers advise poor children not to crave the - to preserve Eskimo "culture". But this is a waste of time. Mary, ture". But this is a waste of time. Mary, a 13-year-old girl in a small Arctic village, accuses her teacher of "trying to sound like an Eskimo'," of "talking like she thought an Eskimo talked, or like she thought we all should talk." Mary wants to be free to choose what is good from both worlds. Not all white people are plunderers, she knows, and not everything they bring is bad: penicillin and electricity are welcome additions to Eskimo life. tions to Eskimo life.

Eskimo parents tell their children not to speak their minds to white people, rather "ask them what they believe and what they want, and be friendly with them." Parents and grandparents teach other survival skills: how to catch and dry fish to care for the down catch and dry fish, to care for the dogs, and to act with "modesty and civility" toward animals as well as people. An adult Eskimo's sense of himself or herself as simply one among the many worthwhile beings and forces in the world may be, says Coles, "the most significant lesson to the Eskimo child, "the influence" that most shapes the child's thoughts and behavior. The drawings of Eskimo children are untingly unpopulated". They convey the tentativeness of material life in the Arctic, the primacy of spirits, and the passing of thought and vanity, borne away on wind and buried under snow.

The drawings of the Chicano children of the Rio Grande Valley centre on people. White authority figures appear bigger than life: a teacher as tall as a school building with a mouth the size of a child's head; a sheriff with enormous ears so that he can take orders, above whom the sun crawls like a spider; the "big boss", the grower, a man three times the size of the farm workers, rearing back on his horse; the grower's daughter with a rifle in her hand, a girl who hates injustice and dreams of leading a revolution in the Valley.

Chicano children feel that they are living under surveillance. Teachers are always mocking their "laziness" and doubting their allegiance to the U.S. Though born in the United States, they are called Movicent or Mexican. are called Mexicans, or Mexicanare called Mexicans, or Mexican-Americans, distinguished from "anglos" by their language, skin color, and employment. But "bad as it is here," says the father of 12-year-old Domingo, "our people" have it worse in Mexico. Domingo's mother disagrees; she won't listen when her husband feels "theke" to live in Tayas It is all she won't listen when her husband feels "lucky" to live in Texas. It is all confusing to a child. Domingo's grandfather came to Texas from Mexico many years ago, but Domingo can never be a Texan "the way some Texans are Texans." Mr. Long, the grower who employs him, is what the foreman calls "a real Texan" though he was born Domingo will probably stay in Texas, in the Valley. There is no viable alternative in the immediate past, and he looks toward the future, as do many Chicano children, with "a certain reasonable gloom". But what becomes of him in the valley is not determined. He is later than other Chicano children "to unce personal ambition." His camaraderie with the white foreman puts a distance, overcome by joking, between him and his people. With outsiders he is energetic, even talkative. In psychological terms you might say he has an identity crisis ahead of him, a time he will have to accept or reject for himself the destiny of the Chicanos.

Coles is extremely reluctant to pin children with "authoritative diagno and prognostic statements". He does speak of the absence of "phobias" among Eskimo children. But his clinical outlook is evident more in the breadth of his gaze than in his language. Som his gaze than in his language. Some-times he has to go against his training, as when he meets an Indian child who "not only sees fit to say nothing, but seems strangely, wonderously, unnerv-ingly disinclined to speak." He has been taught to ask himself if the silent child is "troubled" or "sick". Now he asks a radically different question. Is it possible that some children are brought up to be quiet most of the time, not out of fear or because of various inhibitions and anxieties, but as a quite natural and even active way of responding to the

By removing the discussion from the setting of "normality" and "pathology" Coles fixes attention on cultural and social forces. In this light, we find surprising unities between children who grow up in "racially connected poverty" and children who grow up rich. Both are aware, by the age of 7 or 8, of their special inheritance. In Eskimo, Chi-cano, and Indian families, this amounts to a knowledge of dispossession. Among the well-off, the inheritance is an "entitlement", an expression of emotional attachment to "those familiar, classbound prerogatives, money and power". Entitlement is an extension into childhood of the omnipotence all infants experience, when the world outside the body exists merely to supply

The children in Privileged Ones: The Well-Off and the Rich, learn early how to regard their social and economic inferiors — just as poor children learn an etiquette for dealing with those who have power over them. Veronica, a nine-year-old girl whose father owns a plantation in the Mississippi delta, hears her parents praise then disparage their servants. Ultimately, she locates the inconsistency in the servants, not in herself does't think that "anyone wants to talk about the colored people" but she spends a lot of time talking about them anyway. They need help, she decides, but her parents convince her directly that she is not the one to help them. She is thankful for the message because as young and free of misfortune as she is, she knows that to appear to side with blacks or to step out of woman's tradi-cial trouble and emotional trouble. "I would't know how to get myself out of the trouble if I got into it," she says.

Parents try doggedly to suppress their children's sympathies for those of less means. A West Virginia lawyer, the son of a mine owner, broods over his daughter's concern for safety in the lines. It is not that he wants her to be mines. It is not that he wants her to be insensitive to other people, but rather to be faithful to her own. A Florida grower actually takes his eight-year-old son to see a doctor because the boy has been carrying on for two years about the "unfair" treatment of migrant workers. Once the boy drew a picture of the distriction of the property of the field with the distriction of the property of the field with the distriction of the property of the property of the property of the field with the property of th migrants bending over in the field with a huge sun on their backs. "The sun is exaggerated," his father said. Well, the doctor couldn't do much. He couldn't turn the child's mind away from the scenes in the fields; he couldn't turn the perception of a social reality into an

Many of these rich children have a fear of "the mob" in some form — from a meek disdain for "most people" to an active hatred for "labor people, "organizers" and "outsiders" wh would disturb the social order. James, a 12-year-old boy from New Orleans, the son of a cotton broker, feels a comrade-ship with blacks who are attacked by white mobs. But unlike the people he befriends in his mind, he finds a remedy in the police. He agrees with his father that "if the police don't stop mobs from forming, then the city begins to fall apart." The handsome policeman he draws is his ally.

Coles found among the children of the rich "a strong inclination to build a sanctuary out of one's room and one's property." The sanctuary can also be "a withdrawal from the world's distraction." tions", from social conflicts. These sanctuaries offer a more secure retreat than, say, the reservation for Indians who want to avoid whites. When Sam, a young Pueblo boy, tells his grandfather that he is sure "no whiteman wants to touch our reservation," the old man says "that may be true today, but says "that may be true today, but tomorrow might bring different news." The rich children of Coles' study have, quite expectedly, "an enhanced expectation of what life has to offer ..." and a correspondingly high self-esteem. They emulate their parents' as-suredness and learn to direct their worlds by bearing their parents request worlds by hearing their parents request or command and watching others obey. The fathers in this book are zealous, overworked men — no idle rich here while the mothers are behind the scenes, underutilized.

Maids and teachers do a lot of the work of bringing up the children. A child may feel abandoned when a favorite maid leaves. Richard, the son of a vicepresident of a Boston bank, drew a picture of his maid Charlotte flying off on a broom. When his mother repri-manded him for putting "a nice woman on a broomstick," he told her that he ought to have drawn pictures of all the housekeepers, and identified them, so that he would have a record of the various people who had taken care of him and his sister.

The teacher who expresses opinions The teacher who expresses opinions in school which are obvious to the parents may find his or her job in jeopardy. Well-off parents do not pay tuition fees—or taxes—to have their children converted away from their values. "But children are more than future heirs," says one teacher: they may develop in all sorts of ways, even-if it is their common fate in have money. This common fate to have money. This is Coles' view, too. Furthermore, children of the rich are good students, a pleasure to teach. They pay attention in class, demand to be challenged, and who knows, one or two of them may who knows, one or two of them may make a discovery and add to our collected knowledge.

Each child of the rich has, in one sense, no more than each child of the poor — a "one and only chance" in this world. This is the broadest definition of the crisis shared by all children. To be sure, most of the children in this volume will grow up to be like their narents — adults who are "a perfect foil volume will grow up to be like their parents — adults who are "a perfect foil for a person like me", says Coles. The work that went into this part of his study presented more dangers, more snares, than any other. In home after home, Coles' political and professional standards were often at odds with the ethosthat goes with making and keeping a lot of money.

But up until the end he maintains a hushed respect for what Agee calls "all that each person is, and experiences, and shall never experience..." Then, he lets a New Orleans maid conclude, wondering with her "if there's any profit under the sun." As an ending to this particular volume, the choice of speaker is a slap at the rich. Surely, one of the eloquent children we come to of the eloquent children we come to know in the preceding pages could wonder, praise, indict, sing, and lament for himself or herself, for his or her class. On the other hand, by letting the black woman "have the last word" to the whole Children of Crisis series, Coles goes back to the starting place in his heart and declares his unyielding advo-cacy for the poor, for people of color, and for the unrequited child that lives in

Write On!

Putting It All Together

By KAREN OGDEN

To compose means to put together. Putting together an entire written composition — whether it is a busines report, a letter, or a school theme — is analogous to writing a paragraph. Like a paragraph, a composition writing a paragraph. Like a paragraph, a composition must have unity and coherence. Its development must be logical and clear. As each paragraph must have a topic idea clearly stated or implied, so the entire composition must have a single, overriding intention.

Let's say that you must prepare a report for your employer. How are you going to write to make what you have to say as effective as possible?

First of all focus on the main idea you want to get across: that idea will then determine the details you choose to support your argument. Jot down your state-ment of purpose, and look at it frequently as you write so that you keep it clearly in mind. Whether or not you actually use the sentence in your report is unimportant.

After crystallizing your thesis, make a rough outline for your report. Decide on the most important topics to include, and then arrange them in a logical order. A simple listing of these topics will usually suffice; a more formal or detailed outline is apt to inhibit your writing.

* * * Once you have a rough outline, write out the first draft of your report without worrying about grammar, spelling, or style. These matters need not concern you until you revise. Paying too much attention to them as you write your rough draft may keep you from ever finishing or may make your final copy less smooth than it would otherwise be. Your job with this initial writing is to set down your whole idea.

"A whole is that which has a beginning, middle, and "A whole is that which has a beginning, middle, and end": what Aristotle said of a work of art applies equally well to more mundane types of writing. And let Plato advise you as well: "The beginning is the most important part of the work." The introductory paragraph has a dual function: it sets up the structure for the entire composition, and it gives the reader his first impression. Capture his attention right at the start; otherwise all that follows may be lost.

Examples of different kinds of beginnings may be seen in this series of articles. The first and fourth articles began by setting up situations in which readers could probaby see themselves. When I talked about sample sentences, I began by explaining the broad range of that article and the next two. The third article began with a quotation which illustrated my topic, compound senences. And last week's column and this one both began

Look at other articles to see what kinds of openings are devised, consider how each opening suits the article, and judge for yourself how effective it is. Then try out some of the different strategies in your own writ-

Your opening may entertain your reader with a pertinent anecdote, amuse him with a humorous remark, or shock him with a sensational story. Some kinds of writing require a more straightforward opening: firmly stating your opinion, defining your terms or making a prediction. Starting with a question is an especially good way to give unity to your writing, since the rest of your report can be directed towards answering

Obviously how you start your report will be determined by the nature of the material that follows and by your knowledge of your audience. Sometimes humor is your knowledge of your audience. Sometimes humor is inappropriate; other times defining terms may insult the reader. Whatever device you use, remember that the function of your opening is to introduce your main idea. The middle of your report develops that main idea. How you develop it depends upon your purpose. Writing a problem-solving report, for example, a businessman would state the problem at the beginning, analyze it in the middle, offer several solutions, and conclude by explaining which solution he finds best.

If you need to inform your audience about a series of events leading to a certain result, use a chronological order like the one I discussed last week. If your purpose is to analyze a situation, examine its component parts and to analyze a situation, examine its component parts and look at them in relationship to each other. Suppose a competitor of your company is getting better results than yours; you may need to write a report in which you discuss the cause of the situation and then examine the effects. You might find it appropriate to compare and contrast what the two companies do to achieve their

Whichever method of development you choose, you must make sure that the over-all structure is coherent, that the paragraphs follow one another as clearly and logically as each sentence follows the sentence preceding it. While each paragraph develops its own subtopic, it must also clearly be part of the report's topic

What I said last week about transitions between sentences applies to transitions between paragraphs as well. Using transitional words and phrases and repeating key words are two means of achieving coherence. Beginning a paragraph with a sentence that clearly refers to the topic idea of the preceding paragraph connects the two effectively. Above all, the implicit connection between the ideas joins them.
"Great is the art of beginning, but greater the art of ending," as Longfellow wrote. How you end determines the impression that remains with your reader. Therefore the ending should be strong and clear.

A report that is long or involved requires a summary at the end. An anecdote or quotation may drive home your point effectively. Sometimes your ending can introduce a new idea that resolves the conflicting issues or answers the questions raised by your report. Or you may prefer to speculate on the broader implications of your discussion. Leaving your reader with a question or a call to action involves him and leaves him thinking about what you have said. However you close, your ending should rise naturally from the body of the report, repeating the main idea in a conclusive and emphatic

When you have finished writing, try testing what you have written by shifting paragraphs around. If you can do this without altering your effect, your report probably lacks coherence The beginning, middle, and end of your writing are logically interdependent. In a tightly organized piece of writing, you cannot move paragraphs around any more than you can shuffle steps in a recipe.

If you have thought well, if you have mastered using simple sentences, if you have compounded some ideas and subordinated others, if you have organized your sentences and paragraphs logically, if you have begun effectively and ended emphatically, you have written well. Jamaican Women Deserve to Stay

An Editorial

It's one thing to limit immigration when jobs are scarce; it's another to throw people out when you no longer need them.

In the next week or two, the Canadian government plans to deport nine Jamaican women who originally came to this country as domestic servants. Hundreds more fear they will be given the same treatment.

Their crime? Only that when they applied to come to Canada they concealed the fact they were leaving dependent children at home in the care of friends and relatives. Isn't this reason enough to deport them? Should not anyone who makes a false declaration to an immigration official deserve to have his or her landed immigrant status revoked? In most cases, yes. But in the case of these Jamaican mothers there are special circumstances our government cannot shrug off. Moreover, if Ottawa wished to punish the women they could be fined instead, as others are in similar cases.

To understand what happened we must go back to 1955. In that less enlightened period, Canada did not welcome black immigrants from the Caribbean. However, with industry and commerce booming Canadian housewives were complaining about the shortage of

To ease the shortage, the government entered into a special arrangement with the Jamaican Labor Department to recruit women as domestics.

Under the arrangement, the women were to be of good health and character, between 18 and 40 years of age, experienced in household service and prepared to spend no less than one year as a domestic servant before

In addition, they were required to be "single, widowed, divorced, without minor children or the encumbrances of common law relationships and the issue thereof." Canadian officials in Jamaica were fully aware that most of the women applying to come to Canada had dependent children whether they admitted it or not. But at the time they preferred to look the other way.

The nine women slated for deportation have all spent from five to 10 years in Canada. Most have done well.

They continue to send money home to their children.

They continue to send money home to their children.

No matter how technically correct the government may be in bringing these women to account, it does not alter the fact that its actions are both excessive and

It should leave these poor women alone, cease causing them to live in fear.

They have worked hard. They have made new lives.
They have contributed to this country's prosperity. They erve to be allowed to stay.

"It's important that we be seen to be proposing," said Clark, who advocated during his tour a $2.2-billion tax cut for low- and middle-income earners, sunset laws to eliminate wasteful government agencies, a freeze on public service hiring and reduction of government contract hiring and advertising, among other things.

Clark billed himself as the first man born in Alberta to have a crack at becoming prime minister when he addressed audiences ranging from high school students who had read all his recent major speeches to social ser-vice clubs treating him as an ordinary MP.

He repeatedly described Prime Minister Trudeau as a man with European ways in contrast to his own so-called North American Canadian style, saying his point was that the Liberals "don't gov-ern in that spirit of reaching out, of building things." Trudeau was more interested in contemplating things.

Industry Minister Jack Horner, long-time Conservative who left the party last April, was Clark's target in Hanna, Alta., at a luncheon and cattle auction although Clark did not mention his name because "there was nothing to be gained from

Nixon Alters Memoirs In Reply

By LOU CANNON
Washington Post

if2. SAN CLEMENTE — David Frost is helping former U.S. president Richard Nixon revise his memoirs to answer charges made by H. R. Haldemen in his recently-published book, End of Power, according to a story published today in the New York newspaper, the Trib.

The story says that a massive revision of the 1,150-page manuscript is now under way with the assistance of writers Frost, Nancy Brooks and Robert Markel, editor-in-chief of Grosset and Dunlop, which is publishing the Nixon memoirs.

The Trib said the manuscript has been completed and was in galley form when Haldeman's book appeared, charging Nixon with ordering the Watergate break-in and speculating that he had erased a critical 18-1-2-minute period of a key White House tape.

Nixon is expected to rebut these allegations. The newspaper attributed its story to "reliable sources both within the Nixon compound in San Clemente as well as sources on the outside"

At the Nixon offices in San Clemente, aides declined to comment on whether the book is being revised. However, one key Nixon aide, Ken Khachigian, told the San Diego Union, that "it is absolutely false" that Frost was lishing firm.

The irony of the revision is that Haldeman revised his own book on the basis of Frost's highly-publicized television interviews with Nixon last summer.

At that time the former president depicted himself as acting as a kind of defence attorney for Haldeman, who subsequently was fired by Nixon.

This account reportedly enraged Haldeman, who now is serving a prison sentence at a federal institution in Lompoc, Calif., for his role in the Watergate coverup.

Both Nixon and Haldeman have been well paid for their efforts. Nixon received $2 million for his memoirs, and $600,000 from Frost for the interviews plus a percentage of the profits.

According to The Trib's story, Frost and the team of writers are working with the regular Nixon writing team of Frank Gannon and Khachigian on the revision. The Trib said that Nixon sources would acknowledge only that proofreading is taking place but said that sources in the publishing industry confirm that the book

Sparks Fly In Que. Race

RIMOUSKI, Que. (CP) — The relatively tranquil mood of the Quebec Liberal leadership contest was disrupted Sunday during a meeting between the two candidates and local party militants.

Raymond Garneau sparked the uproar when he accused his rival Claude Ryan of using questionable tactics in the leadership race.

Garneau described as "a low blow" a copy of a newspaper article distributed to party members by Ryan supporters which said Garneau, a former finance minister in the cabinet of Robert Bourassa, had been hospitalized because the pressure of the job was too much for him.

Deported Murderer, 70, Returns

ABBOTSFORD (CP) — A convicted murderer who was paroled and deported from British Columbia to England last fall has returned to Canada and has checked into a prison hospital in this Fraser Valley

Charles Edward Roberts, 70, arrived at the Abbotsford Regional Psychiatric Clinic Feb.

"He said the clinic is his home and he likes it here, so we took him in," said Dr. Chuni Roy, director of the centre. "It was the humane thing to do, but I don't know what will happen to Charlie now."

Dr. Roy said Roberts was paroled and then deported last Oct. 27 after serving about five years of a life sentence for the murder of his wife in Grand Forks.

"He was supposed to live with his sister in England, but she apparently died," Dr. Roy said. "He said he came back here because this was his real home.

Roberts was charged with beating his wife to death Oct. 31, 1967, but was not judged fit to stand trial until late 1972. After his conviction, he was sent to a penitentiary in New Westminster but was transferred six months later to the psychiatric clinic "in a very disturbed condition." Officials said his parole was rescinded Friday because he re-entered the country, and it now will be up to the national parole service and the immigration department to decide his

During his trial, Roberts, an unemployed laborer, told the court his 45-year-old wife was a former Polish resistance fighter and would have killed him if he had not defended himself during a domestic dispute.

He testified that his wife attacked him with a crowbar, screaming "I'll kill you, you little capitalist." Roberts struck back with a piece of wood, killing his wife.

High-Risk Herring Gamble Postponed

The tense countdown to the start of the herring roe season has started. Many of the 3,000 herring fishermen made their way to the spawning grounds in perfect weather on Sunday, ready to enter the high-risk, high-stakes challenge of catching the spawning herring just before they lay their roe (eggs) in the protected waters of the Strait of Georgia and other coastal areas.

Late last week, the fisheries department had expected the roe would be mature enough to allow a 2 p.m. start Sunday.

But the fisheries department postponed the start and today said said it may be Thursday before fishing can begin.

The delay is costing big companies like Canfisco Canadian Fishing Co. Ltd. $25,000 a day to pay loader crews for waiting record independent filled fisherment boats were standing by in the Ganges area (Area 18), poised for the most dangerous and second richest fishery on the coast.

the delicate herring spawning cycle it is better to be early. Tardiness can be costly. The fishery is geared for the Japanese buxury market, and is in its eighth year

Herring delivered to the dock in 1977 carned $25 million and wholesale prices to Japan and other points totalled $90 million. The different monetary rate this year is

In cash flow, the herring fishery is second only to the salmon industry.

Herring fishermen will receive about one-quarter more this year from the packing companies for their catches.

The United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union has agreed on a price of $220 a ton for seiners, compared with $173.50 in 1977, while gillneters will receive $430 a ton, an increase of $80. The high increases are credited to soar ing prices in Japan. Japanese experts, representing the ing federal conservation officials testing for Once the signal is given, free enterprise will take over. Fishermen will work to the extent of their endurance to catch as big a share of the quota as they can. The combination of bad weather and the inclination to overload boats in the rush to get their share has, in the past, led to many sinkings, capsizings and loss of life.

Since the tragedies of the 1975 season various federal government departments have combined forces to provide as much protection as possible.

Regulations for fishing vessels have also been tightened in an effort to avert disaster. Fishing begins in the warmer waters of the Strait of Georgia and gradually works ery will end in late March.

In the past, the treacherous waters off the west coast of Vancouver Island have taken the heaviest toll of boats and men.

Unless a large surplus of herring appears only the labor-intensive gillnetters are allowed in the Ganges area. On the west coast of the island, however, both the highly-mechanized seiners and the gillnetters are in competition for the valuable roe.

While the roe is always in demand at high prices the rest of the herring often goes by default to livestock feed supplement.

Some packing companies, however, like Oakland Industries Ltd. in Victoria, utilize the herring for such items as fish spreads for the European market.

The B.C. Land Commission has recommended that the lots be included in the agricultural reserve, which now covers a large proportion of the 1,000-acre valley.

Council, which recently passed a resolution declaring the Blenkinsop Valley an agricultural green belt, is caught in conflicting pressures from two groups.

One wants stronger protection against development in the form of a bylaw. The other, representing a number of property owners in the area, resents the farmland freeze and wants to see some development occur.

No Move To Aid Granduc

The British Columbia government will not take any action to prevent the closure of the Granduc copper mine at Stewart, says Mines Minis-

"It is also looking at the possibility of trucking asbestos from Cassiar into Stewart for shipping, but it has no intention of intervening to keep the mine open," Chabot

New Jet Owners To Keep Swedes

from New York Rangers of the National

The Rangers had offered Hedberg and Nilsson close to $2 million in two-year contracts and to retain the pair the Jets had to come within $20,000 of the offer.

"We believed it necessary to protect the value of this team so the offer had to be matched," said Bob Graham, chairman of the board for both the previous and the new owners. "The most attractive thing we have to offer is the calibre of the team on the ice and these two play a dominant role.'

The offer was revealed at a Saturday news conference to announce that major league hockey's only publiclyowned franchise was being bailed out by private interests.

"Competition was the thing," team officials con-stantly emphasized, and the Victoria squad completed its commitments with a commendable 9-9 won-lost

But the experience Victoria acquired against stiff compe-tition paid off greatly Sunday as DataTech surprised Bur-naby Bullets 88-71 in the first game of a best-of-three series for the provincial men's "A" championship.

The second game will be played Saturday at Victoria's McKinnon Gym, starting at 8:30 p.m., and the third, if required, Sunday afternoon. The experience, along with speed and poise, was obvious. Victoria intelligently sewed up the inside against the taller mainland team, used its speed to take charge early and then played a controlled offense to stay on top.

As well, Burnaby was ham-pered by inconsistency at guard, missing former na-tional team member Bill Robinson of Chemainus. A member of Victoria's team last year, Robinson had played with Burnaby in the Dogwood League but was ruled ineligible for the playoffs because of late registration.

DataTech's strong team work was sparked by excel-lent performances by Jim Duddridge, Dave Mulcahy and Bob Burrows. Burrows started slowly but found his scoring touch late in the game and finished with 21 points. Mulcahy was tower of strength on the backboards and also scored 20 points while Duddridge also came up with a strong two-way effort to finish with 17 points. DataTech led 41-32 at the Navratilova's victims in the preliminary rounds were Katja Ebbinghaus, Mima Jausovec, Kerry Reid and Virginia Wade. She defeated Wade 6-4, 6-2, in the semi-finals for her 29th match victory in a row, eclipsing the old tour mark of 28 set in 1975

This student's room serves as both a bedroom and study.

Room Cohesion Is Vital

By PAULINE GRAVES

When a room serves a double purpose should it look as though divided between two functions, or is it best to sublimate one function to another? That is nething the individual homeowner has to decide But generally a room has more cohesion and looks other, as in the room shown here.

The room obviously belongs to a student, and as such is used both for study and for sleeping. Because a dormitory, as a place where he can invite friends, it comes off better when the bedroom aspect is sublimated to that of the study. A single bed is the best choice over a double. This size can be disguised as pieces in the room, precisely what happened here.

Pushed against the walls in a corner, and heaped with pillows, the couch-bed plays a secondary role. And to make this stronger, it is partially screened from the room by a built-in cabinet at one end and by a vertical 2"x10" on the other which also frames the window. A matching 2"x10" goes from the cabinet to the ceiling and separates the wall above the bed from that above the cabinet. A painted wall above the cabinet and wallpaper above the bed emphasize the separation. In fact, the bed corner seems an entity all to itself, fostered by the shelf at plate rail level and the space behind it painted black.

Gas Mileage by the Tank Can Show Wide Variation

Bloomers Nearly Stopped Her

The Girl Guide movement started in Canada in 1916 and the first company was formed that same year in St. Catharines, Ont.

I have this from Mrs. Sydney Fairbrother who, as Nan

Bennett, was one of the first girls to join that company. Talking to her in comfort able surrounding at Matson Lodge, where she and her husband live, it was hard to believe, because of her alert far back in Girl Guide history.

"Indeed, I do," she assured me, then preceded to remi-nisce about those long-ago

And it was not until after she and her husband came 1929, with a young family of one daughter and three sons, that Nan Fairbrother again became involved in the work.

Then it was as organizer and house mother of the only all-year-round Girl Guide

"However, I cried, and he finally gave in. And we did wear those bloomers, along with a white middy, a tie showing our company colors, long black stockings and a stetson-type hat, turned up at one side."

The first outing for that first Girl Guide company was to Queenston "in a covered wagon," to participate in the unveiling of the statue of Laura Secord.
The second trip was also by covered wagon to Niagara-on-Lake, to sell tags.

"All the usual things" were included in the program.

Badges were earned and training camps held. As far as camping experiences are concerned, this bright-eyed, 80-year-old con-fesses that about all she remembers now "is the way we erected three sticks to hold our enamel wash basins."

Should you find frozen canned goods in an unheated storage area, the food should still be good if only the seal's broken on home-canned goods. If the commercially canned food isn't leaking, be sure the bulge in the can is due to the frozen contents. If the weather stays cold, defrost what you need in the frig. If not, store the frozen canned goods in the freezer or cook up a storm.

It's worth a little extra time to pick out the oranges and grapefruit you need rather than grabbing up pre-bagged fruit. That way you're less likely to find soft, deteriorating fruit when you open the bag. It also takes a bit of time to pick out the heaviest fruit, but you'll get more juice if every girl who came to the hostel was welcomed as one of the family. They accompanied the Fairbrothers to a nearby Anglican church every Sunday.

They joined with the Fairbrother young in outings and impromptu games and sing-

The first Vancouver Brownie camp on the lower main-land was held on Firneath

Royal Columbian Hospital so it was decided ours was a safe place for such a camp."
In 1948, because of ill health. Nan Fairbrother retired and the hostel was closed. About the same time the provincial executive of the Girl Guide Association presented her with a "thank you" badge for her long and unselfish work — one of the few, indeed perhaps the only such badge, in Canada. A few years later, Fair-

"I kiss the hands of my son-in-law," he told the court trying Bianco. "He has saved the honor of my family. And-that's what counts." For the last 38 years, this code of honor has been enshrined in an Italian law enshrined in an Italian law that makes killing almost re-spectable provided it is a "crime of honor."

But now all that is about to Article 587 of the Italian penal code says: "Whosoever shall cause the death of a spouse, daughter or sister when discovering an unlawful carnal relationship and in a state of anger due to the affront to his or the family's honor shall be imprisoned from three to seven years."

The new provision was formally introduced in 1930 under dictator Mussolini, al-

In the last two years, about 79 Italians, all of them men, have been convicted under this article, escaping the minimum 21 years they could expect for murder.

"The law makes their crimes seem like justifiable homicide," says Senator Mario Gozzini, one of a group of independent left-wingers who have spearheaded the parliamentary campaign to abolish the law.

"It belongs to the bad old "days, when a woman was PETERBOROUGH, Ont. (CP) — Stress and the ability to cope with it are more important factors in the aging process than the chronological age of a person, says Dr. Hans Selye, founding director of the Canadian Institute of Stress of Montreal.

Dr. Selye says that the stress factor in aging is de-termined not by life's events but our reaction to them.

"And everybody reacts differently," he told the annual meeting of the Ontario Association of Physiotherapists.

Dr. Selye displayed photographs of Richard Nixon taken before and after the Watergate incident, explaining that Nixon's physical features changed as a result of his reaction to Watergate.

'In one year his hair began to turn gray," he said. "His flabby cheeks became wrinkled; he looked five to 10 years older."

Although its effects are not always obvious, stress plays a part in every disease Stress accompanies marital problems, job promotions and all changes that require a re-adaptation of a life.

He added that because of the stress factor in the aging process, retirement should be based on an employee's biological age, not his chronological age.

"There shouldn't be an artificial retirement age," he said. "Some people who are 50 want to retire and should

GOTEBORG, Sweden (AP)
- American Eric Heiden stretched his winning streak Sunday by defending his title in-the men's world all-around speedskating championships, defeating Norway's Jan-Egil Storholt and Sergey Marchuk of the Soviet Union.

The 19-year-old Madison. Wis., native had a total of 169.016 points to win his sixth world title in 55 weeks.

Storholt, a former Europe an champion, finished second with 170.346 points and reigning European champion Mar-chuk was third with 171.144

One of the tournament's pre-favorites, Masayuoko Kawahara of Japan, had a rough time, clocking 41.25 seconds in the 500 and 7:54.93 in the 5,000, dropping out of contention for the medals.

Norway's former world champion Sten Stensen pro-duced a lacklustre 5,000metre race, finishing in 7:29.68 to further reduce the

KNOCKOUT NO. 49

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Carlos Zarate, one of the most powerful punchers in boxing history, retained his World Boxing Council bantamweight title Saturday with an eighth-round knockout of Alberto Davila.

The victory was the unbeaten Zarate's 50th, and his 49th knockout.

Davila, a decided underdog, kept the fight even through the early rounds, but the Mexican champion took control in the sixth and finally stopped the Californian at 2: 16 in the eighth round with a cut over an eye.

The successful title defence was the sixth for Zarate, who used his five-inch height advantage over the five-toot-three challenger.

Zarate played a waiting game through the first five rounds, but began stalking Davila in the sixth. He stayed on the attack in the seventh, then ended it in the next round after trapping the challenger in a corner.

"I made it to Cape Town (South Africa) and left there on Dec. 22 for the trip across to Sydney," Thomsen said. "It was quite a voyage."

The Lower Classes Die Young

LONDON (Reuter) — Death and disease still divide the social classes of England and Wales.

of every 100 unskilled male laborers, only 64 will live to retirement age, while the equivalent figure for professional men is 77, says the latest occupational mortality report by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, covering 1970-72.

And because of increased infant and child mortality among laborers' children, the son of a professional surveys appears that five weeks longer.

man can expect to live more than five years longer than the son of his father's gardener.

The report, the 12th since 1885, brought sharp reaction in a country whose Labor government says it is trying to eliminate divisions between the classes.

It "stands as a monument to an inequality we should be ashamed of and despise," said the journal New Scientist.

"Even the most precious commodity of all, life itself, is unequally distributed in our society. How dare we call Britain civilized when a baby just a few months old is three times more likely to die before it reaches childhood if its father is a busman than if he were a precent chornest?" research chemist?"

The major change in the mortality rates since 1911, when they were first divided by classes, is a drop in deaths due to infections and their replacement by killers such as cancer and heart disease.

But death rates for unskilled workers still are higher for a whole string of cases, including lung cancer, heart and circulatory troubles, infections, accidents, poisonings and violence. Workers' wives reflect a similar pattern of increased mortality.

Dr. John Fox of the office's medical statistics division told New Scientist that about 80 per cent of the differences can be attributed to lifestyle rather than work hazards.

Laborers tend to ignore advice about the effects of smoking, drinking and diet and other matters of health

The reports have repeatedly pointed to new occupational hazards. The current figures suggest unsuspected associations between butchers and increased lung and sinus cancer and between electroplaters and lung cancer.

Butchers' exposure to sawdust might explain the first association, the report suggests, noting that woodworkers also have more lung cancer. Exposure to chromium among platers might explain the latter facilities.

"The pointers contained in the report provide the basis for the further research necessary to achieve a safer and healthier environment," said the registrar-general for occupational mortality.

The work confirmed some much-publicized occupational tendencies, People most likely to die of cirrhosis, normally associated with alcohol consumptions. tion, include innkeepers (first), sailors (second), bar-men (third), fishermen (fifth), journalists and authors (14th) and doctors (15th).

Suicide rates are highest among pharmacists (first), laborers (third), doctors (fourth), medical workers (sixth), nurses (eighth) and actors, musicians and entertainers (15th).

SALISBURY (Reuter) -

Britain is conditionally pre-pared to accept an agreement between the white-minority regime and black nationalist leaders based in Rhodesia, one of the key nationalist figures said today.

Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, who has just returned from talks in London with British Foreign Secretary David Owen, told a news conference that some form of referen-dum to test black and white Rhodesian opinion on an agreement is essential for British approval. The Rhode-sian-based black leaders and the Ian Smith government now are discussing terms for an independent black-ruled Rhodesia to settle a dispute that began in 1965 when Smith unilaterally declared the colony of Rhodesia inde-pendent of Britain.

Sithole also said an interim government designed to lead

The Bridge Expert

To the novice, the bidding of this deal would be incomprehensible. To the average player, it probably would be understood. To the expert player, it would be considered "expert bidding."

Opening lead: Eight of . Although Gruver held only seven high-card points, she fell in love with her hand after North had made a jump raise in spades. Despite her meagre holding, she cue-bid her ace of diamonds on the next round, showing first-round obviously a slam try, for if she were interested in merely a game, she would have rebid four spades.

When North-cue-bid his ace of hearts, expressing his de-sire to go along towards a slam, Gruver now made a second cue bid, in clubs this time (showing either the ace or a void).

North's second cue bid in hearts showed both the ace and king of hearts. In Gruver's opinion, the com-bined hands had no heart losers, since her fourth heart could be trumped in dummy. So, hoping that North's distri-bution was such that the hands did not contain two diamond losers, she next made a third aggressive call

- she jumped to six spades.

The play presented no problem. On West's opening lead of the diamond eight, East put up the queen, which was captured by South's ace. Next came the ace and king of trumps, gathering in the adversely held pieces. After conceding a diamond trick to the defenders, Gruver was able to ruff out both her losing diamond and her losing diamond and her losing ing diamond and her losing heart with dummy's two remaining trumps. Her only loser was a diamond trick.

Gruver and her partner were the only ones to bid a small slam on the North-

"Well, I'm hungry. Let's stop for food at Brill, and then go on to Temple," Jill re-plied. "We should have stopped at that nice looking cafe. You said it was just six times as far from Temple as it was from Brill." How far back was that cafe? (Answer tomorrow) Friday's answer: Cheapest item $1.22.

Change of Pot Important doors need an occasional change in size of pot. No defi-nite periods can be given that plants may remain in the same size for the need is based on the amount and kind of root system: The true ferns have a fine The true ferns have a fine mass of fibrous roots, not requiring a deep pot. (It should be mentioned that asparagus is not a fern; you will find it has white fleshy roots farranging to the bottom and sides of the pot.) There is a type of form not known as a supe of form not known as a type of fern pot known as a fern pan; it is about half the normal depth for its diameter. In nature we usually come across ferns growing in leafy topsoil over clay, or in tiny pockets of leafmould on fallen tree trunks.

for the job. New growth soon comes from the crown and new roots take hold of fresh suitable, but to be sure about this, tap the top of the pot on a bench edge, lift off-the pot while the rootball rests upside down on the hand.

You will likely notice a tight mass of blackish root with little evidence of soil. Loosen the root mass with a pointed stick; shake the root sharply over a sheet of paper. You will find it is mostly sand that comes out. All the humus of the soil mixture has been broken down and utilized in the process of providing nutrients for the plants.

Make up a small amount of special fern mixture - leafmould, or well rotted compost material, and a little fine den soil, add a small quantity of well-dampened peatmoss and a little coarse sand. Cut off all dead stems to the level of the fern crown, but don't damage new ones or those in good condition. Put stones or a piece of crock over drainage hole followed by a layer of new soil, then set the rootball back in the pot, holding it up so that the crown will not be buried. Fill in with new soil mixture, tapping the pot sharply on the bench to settle it between and around the roots. Leave a half-inch of space (one inch in larger pots) at the surface to allow for watering. Give one good soaking, then wait a week or so for new growth to appear.

Palms in pots are treated differently for their roots drive downwards in their quest for water in sandy places. Even the pots are dif-penetrating habits.

When grown commercially from seeds, young palm seed lings are put into two-inch palm pots. These are four inches deep to allow for the early development of that downward penetrating root. And a heavy soil encourages its strong growth. Remember this when repotting palms: It is not a large volume of soil but the depth that is wanted. The stem must not be under soil. only the root portion. And in contrast to ferns, palms must be potted tightly around the pot sides.

Use a smooth, blunt piece of wood as a rammer around the sides without damaging

Ferns and palms offer two extremes of cultural needs both of interest to indoor

Call to Unity Opens China's Parliament

TOKYO (AP) - The first formers and insisted that session of China's parliament in three years has begun on a-note of openness recalling the relative freedom of the mid-1950s, when the Communists launched their first industrial Great Leap Forward.

For the first time since 1959 the start of the National People's Congress was announced in advance, and its inaugural session Sunday was given full coverage by Hsinhua, the official news agency, and Peking Radio.

In an unexpected display of candor, Hsinhua reported the credentials of three of the 3,500 delegates-from Hopei, Liaoning and Peking-were annulled because they were found to have committed "se-rious mistakes." The mistakes were not specified.

The Communist regime's leading newspapers, the Peking People's Daily, Red Flag and the Liberation Army Daily, exhorted the members of the congress and of the People's Political Consultative Congress meeting simultaneously to express their views fully and "all pool their wisdom so that the meetings will be successful, lively and invigorating.'

By contrast, the meetings of the People's Congress in 1964-65 and 1975 were conducted in secrecy, their results were not announced until afterward, and their members were carefully

WAVES ARE CONQUERING THE PIERS OF BRITAIN

LONDON (Reuter) - Britain's seaside piers, those charming relics of a leisured Victorian age, are rapidly slipping beneath

Once Britain boasted more than 80 piers, elegant structures of iron and wood. Now there are only 50.

"And half of these will disappear before the end of the century," pier engineer Simon Adamson said, all of them victims of decay, storms, accidents and fires.

These ornate pleasure piers are peculiarly British. Belgium and Holland have a few, the United States has the longest in the world at two miles and France very properly had one off the Promenade Des Anglais in Nice.

British piers were built for promenading and entertainment. No respectable seaside resort felt complete without one.

In Victorian days, society ladies would stroll above the waves to take the sea air or listen to a concert in a hall perched some 50 feet above the sea.

Piers epitomized the English ability to Piers epitomized the English ability to compromise. John Lloyd, a pier enthusiast, said: "The English are a nautical people and this way they can enjoy themselves without getting their feet wet."

Later the pier became the focal point of the English holiday—a place to stroll, sleep, fish or play amusement machines.

Most of the piers were built between 1860 and 1900 and, with constant exposure to and 1900 and, with constant exposure to wind and sea, the cash needed to repair and maintain them is enormous.

The only hope is funding by private com panies or local governments. But both possibilities are unlikely.

To many the demise of the piers is a "national tragedy," and to Julian Orbach, former architect at the Victorian Society, Britain without her piers would just not be

Tanzania Goes All Out In War on Cholera

DAR ES SALAAM (WP) -Health officials, attempting to quell Tanzania's first cholera epidemic, have printed up thousands of posters ex-tolling residents to dig latrines, boil water, bury human waste and not "to take your food from dirty hotels or eating houses."

The officials have quarantined wide areas, and have taken over burying cholera Yet five months after the epidemic broke out, cholera — which ceased being a hazard in most of the world decades ago — is still a serious health threat here. More than 5,000 cases have been reported, and the official death toll which has passed 300, includes solely cases treated in hospitals. No precise figures exist on how many died in remote huts and villages. Some officials estimate the number at well over

Health officials said the disease is no longer at epide-mic levels and is on the wane. "To us, the situation is very much improved," said G. A. Cheyo, the top civil servant in this east African nation's health ministry. "We think it should be pretty much over in a couple of weeks."

New cases reported last week in two of the eight regions hit by the disease. Travellers driving from Dar Es Salaam to Mount Kilimanjaro in the northern interior encoutered quarantine roadblocks at six different

With the existing living conditions, the disease spread over about one-fourth of the country. Thirty-two people died near the seaport of Tanga in one week alone.

Many victims apparently mistook the disease for some-thing else, and did not seek prompt treatment.

Dollar Slide Hits Canadians

Times London Bureau LONDON — Many Canadians working in Britain have suffered a 20 per cent drop in living standards over the past year.

This is the decline in the value of a fixed Canadian cording to Statistics Canada.

Those Canadians lucky enough to get a raise during the past year did not see much of it. Many Canadian companies insisted on sticking to the federal govern-ment's Anti-Inflation Board rule limiting wage increases to six per cent. The drastic drop in British living standards is the result of two separate economic developments, which when mixed spelled double trouble. One problem has been continued inflation in Britain. The other problem is the plunge of the Canadian dol-

One year ago, the exchange rate in London for the pound was $1.78.

Now the pound is around $2.19. That is, it takes $2.19 to buy one British pound.

Inflation in Britain at the end of January was 9.9 per

This is not too different from Canada's rate (9.5 per cent) but it is the lowest since 1973. For instance, in May last year the British inflation rate was 20 per cent.

The British cost of living has almost doubled since the beginning of 1974. The retail price index, based on 100 as of January 1974, is now 190. One year ago it was 172.

Even when the pound was at its lowest ebb, in the winter of 1976-77, the British rate of inflation was soaring far faster than Canada's.

Caught tightest in this squeeze are Canadians on fixed dollar incomes — pen-sioners or those whose employers do not make allow-ances for fluctuations.

A number of these employ-ees have been drafting pleas to their Canadian bosses to put things right, according to a financial expert whose ad-vice they have sought here.

'If they have been here some years, of course they had some good times, when the pound was low and the dollar was strong," he said. "But now they are finding things difficult. Of course the good companies do not let this happen

NEW YORK (AP) - A 12-man sanitation crew with police protection col-lected 22 tons of garbage today from the middle of a Brooklyn street where resi-dents had dumped the trash to protest a lack of collections.

All-Out Hydro Strike Looming This Week

Al Ashton, ATU business agent, said the unions representing Hydro workers will meet in a strategy session Thursday with the B.C. Federation of Labor.

Local 213 of the IBEW, representing 600 B.C. Hydro gas workers, is in a legal position to strike at any time, and the OTEU's previous agreement expired last March 31. However. Local 258, representing 2,300 B.C. Hydro employees, ratified a two-year agreement in December.

Transit workers here and in Vancouver have voted to reject provincial mediator Ken Albertini's recommendations to settle their contract dispute (Area 18), poised for the most dangerous and second richest fishery on the coast.

In the search for the exact moment for the delicate herring spawning cycle it is bet-ter to be early. Tardiness can be costly. The fishery is geared for the Japanese luxury market, and is in its eighth year.

Herring delivered to the dock in 1977 earned $25 million and wholesale prices to Japan and other points totalled $90 million. The different monetary rate this year is expected to raise the ante.

In cash flow, the herring fishery is second only to the salmon industry. Herring fishermen will receive about one-quarter more this year from the packing companies for their catches. The United Fishermen and Allied Work ers Union has agreed on a price of $220 a ton for seiners, compared with $173.50 in 1977, while gillneters will receive $430 a ton. an increase of $80. The high increases are credited to soar ing prices in Japan. Japanese experts, representing the buyers for Japanese campanies, are assisting federal conservation officials testing for ripeness as the fishing fleet stands by.

Once the signal is given, free enterprise will take over. Fishermen will work to the extent of their endurance to catch as big a share of the quota as they can.

The combination of bad weather and the inclination to overload boats in the rush to get their share has, in the past, led to many sinkings, capsizings and loss of life.

Since the tragedies of the 1975 season various federal government departments have combined forces to provide as much protection as possible

Regulations for fishing vessels have also been tightened in an effort to avert disaster. Fishing begins in the warmer waters of the Strait of Georgia and gradually works in the Gulf Islands

north. Even in the northern climes the fishery will end in late March.

In the past, the treacherous waters off the west coast of Vancouver Island have taken the heaviest toll of boats and men.

Unless a large surplus of herring appears only the labor-intensive gillnetters are allowed in the Ganges area. On the west coast of the island, however, both the highly-mechanized seiners and the gillnetters are in competition for the valuable roe.

While the roe is always in demand at high prices the rest of the herring often goes by default to livestock feed supplement.

Some packing companies, however, like Oakland Industries Ltd. in Victoria, utilize the herring for such items as fish spreads for the European market
